

Quarantine Cases – Case One: The Missing Stick

“Another day of quarantine!” thought Detective Sergeant Helga. “What might this day throw at me? My pack is still at home because of the Corona virus Covid 19. Maybe we have another playful day in the garden? At least they have to take me out twice a day.”

But the day hold a surprise for her. Detective Cat Inspector Barnaby, her boss at the police station, contacted her: “Detective Sergeant! We have a new case! Mr. Puggle, the dog next door, is missing is favorite stick. He might have lost it in the field. Get onto your paws and do a search!”

“Phew!” thought Detective Sergeant Helga. “The boss could have said that a little nicer. Okay, let’s beg the pack to take me for a walk.”

During the walk the Detective Sergeant took her pack to the field the DCI Barnaby had mentioned. It was a very large field with a lot of tall grass. “Oh boy that might take a while,” the DS thought. “Hopefully the ground is not wet, I hate to have muddy paws. Then the pack want to try to clean them with a towel. That’s not my favorite sports.”

After a longer search and a lot of different sticks, she found an interesting one. “Hurray!” she barked. “That one definitely smells like Mr. Puggle!”

DS Helga took the stick home with her and contacted her boss. “Detective Cat Inspector Barnaby, I found Mr. Puggle’s stick. He can pick it up at the station.” “Very good my dear,” said DCI Barnaby. “Contact Mr. Puggle and then file a report.”

“Ugh!” the DS thought. “How I hate paperwork. But the faster I start the earlier I’m finished and can do fun stuff.”
